

The Nature of Manjari-Seva

Letter from Svami Sadananda Dasa 23.1.61

Into English and within square brackets: Kid Samuelsson

Last modified 22.6.19

[...] It is a mistake to think that Yashoda-Nanda's inner kind of bhakti could be had by any human being, even in the remotest way. This bhakti belongs to the cit-forms [eternal co-players] of Vraja and is unique, in contrast to the bhakti belonging to the cit-forms of Vaikuntha.

It is more important to try to correctly understand what bhakti is, and it is a great mistake wanting to insist that what one does as seva here should be exclusively accepted, pushing others into the background. Krishna loves the manjari-s so much because they render seva for Radha and the sakhi-s without any wish for their own sukha [happiness], and that they don't want to push their way forward into Radha's and Krishna's direct presence.

In our seva in this world, we must try to do it in the same way, be without any expectation, not waiting for that our personal seva should be appreciated, accepted and praised. [...]